Part 2: Description

Overview: Not applicable

Features: Not applicable

Educational aims: This module will enable students to develop a detailed appreciation and comprehension of crime and criminology in a transnational context. It will achieve this by examining the broadening criminological stage in light of its relationship with globalisation, and allow students to build on the theoretical knowledge gained in underpinning modules (specifically Introduction to Criminological Theory and Critical Criminology) by applying such perspectives (amongst others) in a transnational setting.

Outline syllabus: The module will draw on comparative criminology, allowing students to explore the applicability of criminology in a number of cultural settings, as well as exploring issues relating to transnational crime and the ways in which the wider academic debates about globalisation interact with criminology and criminological research.

Key elements include:

The culturally constructed nature of the criminological discourse

The challenge of comparing rates of crime and deviance around the world

The policing of transnational crime and international law enforcement strategies.

The study of a range of transnational criminal activities including trafficking in drugs and persons, terrorism, and crimes perpetrated by nation-states

The impact of globalisation on crime and the study of crime

An examination of theoretical perspectives on globalisation and their relationship with criminology.

Part 3: Teaching and learning methods

Teaching and learning methods: The module is taught through weekly lectures and seminars supplemented by other arrangements such as tutorials and drop in sessions. Materials will be available ahead of the teaching sessions and take the form of questions, real-world case studies, vignettes and problem solving exercises based upon essential reading which mirror each lecture. Students will work collaboratively and independently to develop and critically apply their knowledge using these materials in the seminars. To help students prepare for assessments a lecture and a seminar will focus on the assessment.

Module Learning outcomes: On successful completion of this module students will achieve the following learning outcomes.

MO1 Critically analyse key debates regarding the nature and parameters of transnational and comparative criminology

MO2 Critically evaluate the impact of globalisation on crime and deviance around the world

MO3 Understand and evaluate issues of crime and criminal justice that are specific to a country or region via case studies

MO4 Evidence a critical understanding of how theoretical approaches in criminology can be applied in a range of cultural settings

Hours to be allocated: 300

Contact hours:

Independent study/self-guided study = 228 hours

Face-to-face learning = 72 hours

Total = 0

Part 4: Assessment

Assessment strategy: The module assessments have been designed to underpin students' learning and skills acquisition in the module, to provide for learning beyond the material delivered in the classroom and to contribute to the diversity of assessment methods on the programme as a whole.

The assessment is designed around the learning outcomes, and allows students a level of flexibility in tailoring the topic of the work to their own interests, which is in line with the development of independent study skills that we would expect students to demonstrate at this level.

Assessment Task 1: 2500 word Threat Assessment Report.

This assignment is designed to test the students' ability to research an area in depth, and present their work in a format which simulates that used by practitioners working in this field. It focuses on the transnational part of the module.

Assessment Task 2: 1500 word essay

This essay is focused around the comparative element of the module, and will allow students to present their research in the form of a sustained argument that answers the question set.

There will be a formative assessment opportunity, in the form of a plan for for Task 1 to enable students to gain feedback before submitting.
