Part 2: Description

Overview: This first-year module is an introduction to and overview of nearly 500 years of British history

Educational Aims: See Learning Outcomes.

Outline Syllabus: Students consider political, social, cultural, religious and imperial history in Britain from the fourteenth-century Black Death through to the early nineteenth century. Taking a broad geographical and chronological view, the course considers the interwoven and often contentious histories of England, Wales, Ireland and Scotland, and students will explore both specific events and thematic topics in weekly sessions.

Teaching and Learning Methods: The module will be delivered through a combination of lectures and seminars. Although the module is clearly content-driven students will be encouraged to think carefully about the sources historians use to construct their arguments and the way in which academic debate is constructed from such sources. Lectures will provide an outline of each topic and provide some contextual background for the seminars. Seminar sessions will use a combination of selected primary source material from the period (e.g. textual, visual, oral, material), and selections of secondary literature, and students will have the opportunity to discuss and debate issues arising from these readings.

Part 3: Assessment

The module is assessed through a journal article review (1,800 words), and a final online paper. These assessments are designed to test a range of abilities from critical evaluation of academic literature to the clear and concise communication of ideas, and to develop essential skills for the study of history at levels 2 and 3.

For the journal article review, students are required to select one set of paired articles from the designated titles and critically evaluate the content and argument of each. For the final paper, students will be required to answer two questions relating to topics covered across the module. This format encourages students to engage with the module in its entirety.

The assessments are designed to measure:

- a) critical understanding of concepts and topics relating to British history, as explored in the module
- b) the ability to understand and critically assess journal literature
- c) the ability to present ideas in clear prose and observe appropriate academic standards (footnotes, bibliographies)

Feedback for these assessments will be sent first to students electronically. All students will be invited to attend personal feedback tutorials which will be a timetabled part of the module's contact hours.
