Part 2: Description

Media and Cultural Production embeds cultural research and digital media production skills within a broader understanding and engagement of the dynamics of the creative economy and the role of media in society and the economy at a global level, to prepare students to create pathways towards employment as creative professionals in a range of contexts from digital media production companies, to cultural organisations such as museums, the public sector, charities, etc as well as generating media content for the corporate sector.

Students acquire skills in photography, video, sound and web design to equip them to devise experimental and socially engaged projects. They also develop skills in writing and research to develop innovative and appropriately framed creative media content. These are supplemented by a training in the use of software used within the industry, and an ability to respond to new developments as the industry innovates.

Production skills and thinking are underpinned by an understanding of the impact of media in its cultural and historical context and the way viewers respond to media forms and practices. Students are provided with a rigorous academic training in research methods and skills in analysis, academic writing and presentation.

Students also acquire an in-depth understanding of the way that media practitioners work in a fast-changing industry landscape through research exercises and projects conducted in Bristol's vibrant cultural and media sector, with work placement an option between Years 2 and 3. This engenders an awareness of the varied production contexts for media professionals, from large organisations such as the BBC and Ardman, to small scale freelance and media startups in areas such as games, music video, experience design for locative media, interactive documentary, immersive media and virtual reality.

Students also learn about the ways media are used to reach viewers and communicate ideas in a range of other industry sectors, and are equipped to research the ways interactive and participatory media forms require new competencies, and engender different forms of engagement to traditional cultural forms.

We offer research-led teaching, which means students work alongside tutors on specified research exercises, some of them deriving from industry needs and briefs, as well as designing their own projects around their chosen focus and interests. This helps them acquire the project design and research skills that are necessary to become professionals able to work independently and as part of a team, in the cultural and media industries, and as independent research project design becomes more pronounced as they proceed through the three years of their study, they are able to prepare a portfolio of written and production work relevant to their chosen professional pathway.

The Media and Cultural Production programme is embedded in the Digital Cultures Research Centre (DCRC), based at the Pervasive Media Studio (PMS), a world leading innovation lab that sits within Bristol's Watershed Media Centre. The curriculum and the students learning experience are enriched by the involvement in DCRC of core teaching staff who conduct research in collaboration with cultural organisations and industry partners, as well as by DCRC researchers based at the PMS who contribute their expertise throughout the three years by providing specialist sessions and workshops. As well as being offered opportunities for volunteering and participating in the DCRC's event and conference programme, students are given near-live briefs arising from current research projects as part of their studies, to ensure they are at the forefront of cultural innovation in the sector.
