Section 2: Programme Overview, Aims and Learning Outcomes

Part A: Programme Overview, Aims and Learning Outcomes

Overview: Students acquire knowledge of some of the Law's core areas and develop key skills and attributes for their future working lives. There are opportunities for a year on placement or study abroad, and participation in a significant range of extra-curricula activities including mooting, pro-bono work and Law student societies. Here, students mix with those on Professional Law courses. Criminology is a contemporary, multi-faceted and applied subject area. Criminology focuses on definitions and understandings of crime as well as criminal justice from a range of perspectives (victims, offenders, the state and institutions). Criminology, especially the criminology taught at UWE, focuses on theoretical learning as well as the application of this knowledge to real world situations.

Students are challenged in their ability to communicate, analyse and problem-solve, developing their intellectual capacity focusing on practical, enterprising and future-facing application within the legal arena and elsewhere. Consequentially, a Law and Criminology degree opens graduates up to a range of graduate level positions, including, in the criminal justice system and related charitable sectors.

Educational Aims: This programme enables students to be able to combine Law with Criminology in such a way as to provide them with an overview of some key areas of Criminology. Criminology and Law are complementary disciplines. The programme enables students to develop specialist knowledge and skills to meet the demands of the modern workplace both in law firms and more generally in the private and public sectors.

Programme Learning Outcomes:

On successful completion of this programme graduates will achieve the following learning outcomes.

Knowledge and Understanding

- A1. Depth of knowledge in a range of both black letter law and socio-legal studies.
- A2. All students are offered the opportunity to achieve a breadth of study of traditional law and developing legal subject areas which are likely to be of interest to a student of law and criminology
- A3. Knowledge of legal values, principles and a substantial range of major legal concepts.
- A4. Knowledge of criminology subjects and principles and an understanding of practice.
- A5. The relevance of the disciplines of law, economics, accounting, business and management to professional life.

Intellectual Skills

- B1. Learning to research, analyse, critically evaluate and develop a technical and practical understanding of important legal and criminological concepts and principles.
- B2. Understanding the process of research - how to research and interpret and apply information from relevant legal materials such as case and statute law.
- B3. Developing a mature understanding of the areas of law and criminology studied.
- B4. Understanding the fast developing and organic nature of some areas of law.
- B5. Understanding of the nature of criminology research into the criminal justice system.

Subject/Professional Practice Skills

- C1. Challenges students to develop skills of oral argument.
- C2. Encourage students to identify appropriate evidence and to build and structure arguments in an appropriate and ethical manner.
- C3. Technical skills development is fostered through practical problem solving.

- C4. Develop a practical understanding of what happens in court by making a court visit and reflecting on the outcome and researching a specific legal role relevant to the case that they observed.
- C5. Deal specifically and practically with ethical professional issues.
- C6. The analysis of scenarios or research of topics which require the practical application of law to facts.
- C7. Criminology and Law modules develop practical contextual understanding.

Transferable Skills and other attributes

- D1. Research techniques
- D2. Report writing
- D3. Identifying issues and obtaining and summarizing appropriate and up to date legal information retrieved from electronic sources.
- D4. The ability to work successfully both independently and as part of a team
- D5. The ability to identify and use primary and secondary sources of law.
- D6. To show an understanding of legal and criminological principles
- D7. The ability to apply legal knowledge to practical problems of limited complexity in order to produce arguable solutions to concrete problems.
- D8. To demonstrate the flexibility of understanding required to recognize alternative conclusions to problems based upon an informed understanding.

Part C: Higher Education Achievement Record (HEAR) Synopsis

Criminology is a contemporary, multi-faceted and applied subject area. Criminology focuses on definitions and understandings of crime as well as criminal justice from a range of perspectives (victims, offenders, the state and institutions). Criminology, especially the criminology taught at UWE, focuses on theoretical learning as well as the application of this knowledge to real world situations. Throughout their degree criminology students will experience a range of learning (online/offline), teaching (lectures, seminars, workshops and TEL) and assessment (essays, exams, case studies, presentations) techniques. Students also acquire knowledge of some of the Law's core areas and develop key skills and attributes for their future working lives. There are opportunities for a year on placement or study abroad, and participation in a significant range of extra-curricula activities including mooting, pro-bono work and Law student societies. Students are challenged in their ability to communicate, analyse and problem-solve, developing their intellectual capacity focusing on practical, enterprising and future-facing application within the legal arena and elsewhere.

Consequently, a Law and Criminology degree opens graduates up to a range of graduate level positions, including, in the criminal justice system and related charitable sectors.

The learning outcomes of the programme map against both the QAA subject benchmark statement for Law Benchmarks 2007 ISBN 978 184482765-5 and the Joint Statement issued in 1999 by the Law Society and the General Council of the Bar on the completion of the initial or academic stage of training by obtaining an undergraduate degree.

The programme team follows closely developments subsequent to the the Solicitors Regulation Authority, the Bar Standards Board and ILEX Professional Standards' joint Legal Education and Training review, and in particular the SRA's response, via its Training for Tomorrow Policy implementation, to the review's report. As part of this, the programme team took into account the SRA's consultation paper regarding the new Competence Statement for Solicitors, and the BSB's steps to develop benchmarks for its Future Bar Training Programme. The programme team will continue following the professional bodies' endeavours clearly to define competence for access to the legal profession with a view to the programme continuing to support its students to achieve those competence requirements.

Education for Sustainable Development (ESD)

The Programme Team is actively participating in the faculty's further development of ESD through the Learning and Teaching Enhancement Group in order to continue to participate in the implementation of the University's strategic priorities regarding ESD as stated in the UWE Bristol Strategy 2020.
