Part 2: DescriptionBroad aims of the Film Studies undergraduate programme

Disciplinary innovation: The programme provides students with the opportunity to study film from subject-specific and interdisciplinary perspectives, enhancing their knowledge and understanding of the role of the arts in society. It contains an innovative strands across levels: one develops writing skills in a range of forms, culminating in several options in the final year project module; the other explores global, national and regional cultures of film production and consumption, culminating in a module focused on Bristol's distinctive film and television industry and culture. The curriculum recognises the significance of digital media convergence and of new forms, such as transmedia franchises, as well as new approaches to studying film, such as the 'affective turn' and film festival studies.

Nuanced textual and contextual analysis: The programme equips students with the intellectual, practical and creative skills necessary to develop independent, informed critique of filmic texts. Films are placed into detailed historical, cultural and industrial contexts, drawing on a wide range of genres, cultures and periods. Students will develop high level analytical and conceptual skills, alongside critical understanding of the complex relationships between texts, media forms, audiences and institutions.

Inclusive and global approaches: The curriculum embraces diverse cultures and an international approach. The programme aims to give students new perspectives on their own lives and on the experiences of others.

Independent thinking: The programme aims to help students work independently (individually and collectively) and to reflect on their own skills, knowledges and perspectives. The curriculum enables students to recognise and develop specialist interests, both intellectually and professionally.

Practice-oriented teaching: The programme is centrally concerned with the relationships between representation, communication and the cultural industries, and encourages learning through practice and the practical application of knowledge. Technical and creative graduate-level skills are embedded in teaching, learning and assessment strategies, with a particular focus on two areas: different forms of writing and digital content production (cultural journalism, audiovisual essays, creative writing, publishing); and cultural festivals and events (curation, marketing). These skills are essential to a wide range of employment sectors, ensuring 'ready and able' graduates.

Commercial and social awareness: The programme aims to provide students with knowledge of the cultural industries and economic, social and political factors affecting the production, distribution and consumption of film and related media/texts. This includes exploring questions of cultural value, taste formation, access and participation.

Cultural engagement: The programme provides opportunities for students to participate directly in local and regional cultural industries and events, gaining relevant industry experience.

Education for Sustainable Development: The programme explores the complex historical and contemporary interrelations of culture, society, economics and politics in and across local, national, regional and global scales. Through its focus on the development of independent, evidence-based, critical thinking (systematic, complex, flexible, self-reflexive), it encourages students to question assumptions, to engage with difference, and to revise and develop opinions, attitudes and knowledges accordingly. Particular modules introduce specific texts and critical-theoretical approaches that are themselves concerned with social, economic and environmental justice, with the diversity of global cultures, and with the imagination of possible futures. Students are also encouraged to volunteer and to engage with PAL and the UWE Bristol Futures Award.

Level 0 consists of four year-long 30 credit modules in which the main focus is on the acquisition both of appropriate academic skills and of an awareness of the relevance to their future pathway in English Literature, English Literature with Writing, English and History, English Language and Literature, History, English Language and Linguistics, Creative and Professional Writing, Media and Cultural Production, Media Culture and Communication, Film Studies, Film Studies and Literature, Liberal Arts, Broadcast Journalism, Journalism and Public Relations, or Media and Journalism. Academic Skills in Arts and Humanities (UPCNA7-30-0) will act as a "spine" to the year, supporting the other three modules through a variety of assessment methods. Students will be encouraged to develop as reflective learners and to understand the importance of the UWE graduate attributes. The teaching methods are designed to engage students and develop their core skills and confidence.

Specific aims of the Film Studies undergraduate programme

Part 2: Description

Curriculum innovation: The programme incorporates distinctive strands with progression built in from year to year. One strand is built on the emerging field of industry/production studies but tweaked so as to ensure students professional and commercial awareness. It introduces the cultures of production, distribution and exhibition at level 1, focuses on the UK context at level 2 and on Bristol itself at level 3. A second strand is built on the development of writing (and related technological) skills beyond conventional academic essay-writing. It introduces blogging and audio-visual essays at level 1 and screenwriting and film journalism at level 2; students have the option to develop these skills further in an independent project and other assessments at level 3. These innovations are embedded in a programme that also teaches the range of historical, critical and theoretical approaches to film appropriate to a single honours BA, while addressing new and emerging areas of study, such as: film festival studies; film music; film phenomenology and the affective turn; and stardom and performance.

Orientation to an employment sector: The programme has been designed to take account of two facts: that a significant proportion of Film Studies students are not particularly interested in working in film or media; and that only 20% of the creative media's workforce is directly involved in production (Creative Skillset's 2012 Employment Census). The programme therefore expands students' sense of the much wider range and variety of careers available in the creative media and cultural sectors, and provides them with the skills and knowledge to pursue such careers as well as those graduates more commonly pursue (management, administration, teaching, postgraduate study, etc).

Links with research: The programme is designed and will be taught by research active scholars with national and international standing. Their work informs what might be considered more conventional modules, giving them a distinctive flavour; other modules are build more explicitly around research specialisms and expertise in areas such as British film and television, documentary, film festivals, film genre, film music, industry and production studies, Hollywood, and world cinema.

Opportunities for learning outside the formal curriculum: The programme has a sandwich course variant (for which level 3 credits are awarded). In addition, students at all levels are expected to engage with and participate in Bristol's film culture; opportunities to become involved in festivals and other events are regularly promoted through a FaceBook group open to current students and alumni. Such activities both enrich student experience and contribute to the cultural life of the city and region.

Programme requirements for the purposes of the Higher Education Achievement Record (HEAR)

The programme studies subject-specific and interdisciplinary approaches to film in a global context. It explores a wide range of genres, contexts and periods, enhancing students' understanding of cultural diversity and the role of the arts in society. It engages with cultural industries, venues and events in the region, building critical and commercial awareness of the sector. This is complemented by practical experience of digital content production, creative writing, cultural journalism, and events management and curation. Graduates have high level analytical and communication skills (written, oral, visual), information literacy, research skills, and the ability to develop independent projects effectively (individually and collectively).

Part 3: Learning Outcomes of the Programme

Please note that rather than listing every learning outcome from all 19 modules, each learning outcome below aggregates related outcomes from multiple modules, only some of which will be assessed on any individual module. Outcomes are also assessed progressively from level to level. Therefore, the large number of Xs in the table represent neither over-assessment on individual modules nor repeated assessment of the same things from level to level.

Part 5: Entry Requirements

The University's Standard Entry Requirements apply.

Tariff points as appropriate for the year of entry – up-to-date requirements are available through the courses database.

Tariff points: 120

GCSE: Grade C or above in English Language, or equivalent. Please note the University does not accept Level 2 Key Skills, Functional Skills or Certificates in Adult Numeracy and Literacy as suitable alternatives to GCSEs.

A-level subjects: No specific subjects required. Points from A-Level General Studies and AS-Level subjects (not taken onto full A-Level) can be included towards overall tariff. You must have a minimum of two A-Levels. Relevant subjects include: English Language, English Literature, Film Studies, Media Studies.

EDEXCEL (BTEC) Diploma: A minimum of DDM from the BTEC Diploma.

Access: Achievement of the HE Diploma; to include 30 L3 credits at merit; achievement of Level 2 credits giving GCSE equivalency (where appropriate) in English Language.

We welcome applications from those who do not have the entry requirements outlined here. We will consider applications on the basis of evidence of personal, professional and educational experience which indicate an applicant's ability to meet the demands of a degree. We like to give such applicants every opportunity to show that they have the motivation and ability to succeed in their chosen programme of study.

Part 6: Reference Points and Benchmarks

Set out which reference points and benchmarks have been used in the design of the programme:

QAA UK Quality Code for HE

- Framework for higher education qualifications (FHEQ) (2008)
- Subject benchmark statements for Communication, Media, Film and Cultural Studies (2016)

Strategy 2020

University policies

The programme has been designed in line with the QAA Quality Code for HE, the relevant benchmarking statement (Communication, Media, Film and Cultural Studies (2016)) and the QAA-HEA Guidance on graduate outcomes. These documents were used to establish the programme's broad aims and parameters. Following more content-focused discussions of potential modules, these documents (along with the documents and colleagues below) provided an apparatus with which to structure the programme and shape individual modules. They also provided guidance on the integration of graduate skills development, work-related learning, employability and education for sustainable development into modules, levels and the overall programme.

Reference to the following additional resources has ensured that the programme complies with strategic priorities and relevant policies, as well as shaping and confirming its currency and attractiveness:

SEEC credit level descriptors for HE (2016)

UWE Learning and Teaching Strategy

UWE QMEF requirements

UWE Access and Widening Participation strategy documents
