Part C: Higher Education Achievement Record (HEAR) Synopsis

This course explores the creative potential of filmmaking. Production-based, it establishes strong story-telling, team-working and production skills essential to working in the professional media as well as building technical competence in the craft aspects of cinematography, editing, sound and production design. Graduates develop as confident filmmakers through making work across a wide range of genre and by undertaking work experience to underpin their understanding of professional practice. They are able to engage with critical issues, debates and theories as well as innovative technological developments in their field so they can enter the creative industries as imaginative, resourceful and self-disciplined practitioners.
